Adult Industry Pays Tribute to Hugh Hefner

Iconic publisher of Playboy magazine, Hugh Hefner passed away in September, and the adult industry responded with an outpouring of comments in remembrance of the man many credit with making adult media mainstream.

In the wake of his passing, AVN published an article highlighting quotes from many adult entertainment figures including director and Girlfriends Films founder Dan O'Connell, and Moose, President of Girlfriends Films. Social Media in support for LGBTQ

It amazes me how often we hear people talk about the negative affects that the media has on our life, but so very few speak the good – specifically the awareness it helps create, especially within the LGBTQ community. In my life I struggled with what it meant to be a lesbian until I got hooked on my first T.V. show involving – you guessed it – two lesbians. Was my addiction to the hit T.V. show South Of Nowhere really my subconscious screaming, “I’m gay and that’s okay!” or was it just the fact that I wanted Gabriella Christian and Mandy Musgrave to sit on my face? Who really knows, but everything about the show brought me out of my head and helped me to begin to accept myself.

While some say the media depicts negativity for the LGBTQ community, I think most of us who are a part of this community look to the media as a way to represent everything we are, and help us to find ourselves. Many people like Ellen Degeneres, Lea DeLaria, Jane Lynch and Rosie O’ Donnell, to name a few, have gotten famous from their well-known roles, and each one of them has a shared uniqueness for their activism at many LGBTQ events and within the community. While it’s amazing to see others rise up and be “out and proud” in the public eye, it’s also extremely important to recognize the bravery and vulnerability these people put themselves in.

According to Glaad.org, the percentage of LGBTQ series regular characters for 2016-2017 on broadcasted television was a record percentage of 4.8%, which is the highest percentage we’ve seen thus far. Though the percentage has fluctuated up and down since 2012, overall, the media has become progressively more proactive in delivering a positive LGBTQ message, which can be life changing for those looking for community.

Coming out is a strange thing. It’s a continuous thing. A never-ending thing. It’s hard, and sometimes it can be isolating. Positive portrayal of LGBT characters in the media has given more people the chance to understand themselves and have someone to relate to. These characters have offered a way to connect your feelings and experiences with someone else. We live in a time where media is such an integral part of our lives and development, and having these positive influences can give us someone to relate to, and even to connect with others for support. How lucky are we?S.tylene
