The first time I experienced sex with another woman.

Lets just start this off by saying – the title basically speaks it all. We've gotten to know a lot about lesbians . . . as most things I write have given us a general basis to the things lesbians like and dislike. The best ways to please us, our favorite sex positions, and of course the sex-toys we use most in the bedroom; Here and there I'll mention some details about myself, or primarily some conversations that were struck up between friends and I earlier in the week. If I'm being frank, I love talking about sex. I'm more open to it than I am ashamed of it. We are so willing to explore ourselves, yet hide our stories like we're ashamed for the things we like. Now, I have a hard time wrapping my head around this concept, but the first time I had sex with another female I sure as hell was mute in all ways to announce that I'd prefer to be going down on a woman than a man.

I laugh as I write this now, thinking about how bizarre it is to remember a time where I actually liked to be giving head to a male as if I never had the option to let a girl sit on my face. At this point, I'm not quite sure another option exist; It's either, have a female sit on my face or let me put my face between her thighs . . . both options clearly signaling I'm a lesbian . . . and that I just really enjoy the taste of a woman. Now, I could always give you another broad story and in general topic on most lesbians as a whole but I thought this month we'd dive into getting to know my experience a little bit more intimately, so bare with me.

The first time I ever slept with a woman I thought I'd be able to tell right off the bat what I was doing. I mean, it should be easy to know how to please her if I'm capable of pleasing myself, right? I prefer to dominate more than I like be dominated, so in my mind I was definitely set on the fact I was going to be making a girl orgasm that night. Truthfully, I just like to believe confidence is key, and while this may be true, I never found that out that night because the girl I had sex with definitely had a way of putting me in my place. I could argue to this day that I like having an upper hand in the bedroom but there is something about having another girl look you in the eye while she has one hand placed gently around your throat and the other pulsing in and out of you that makes you quickly turn weak to the female touch. I'm not even sure at this point I realized I was gay, I was just too enamored with the sensation of her naked breast being pressed against mine. I would love to have some type of details indicating that, I too, got to feel her dripping down my fingers and the taste of her that night - but the experience was fully flipped while she took charge leaving me question every bit of my sexuality and genuinely feeling eager to keep doing what we were doing every night after that.

I guess this is my way of saying you don't have to be a lesbian to have sex with another girl, In fact I have had plenty of sex with straight girls in the course of my coming out and some of it has been better than the sex I had with my ex girlfriends. I actually don't even think I had been questioning myself at the point of feeling her tongue drag over every inch of my body - I'm not even really sure how I was in the position to have her tongue in my mouth to begin with - but one thing led to another and I definitely wasn't asking her to stop. Nor was I questioning why I just wanted it to keep going. I think even as a straight girl, I had dreams of the sensual touch from women just based on noticing the female body was much more attractive than the males. My first time with a female wasn't the reason I became a lesbian, I mean, I was clearly a lesbian already with how much I enjoyed sex with another female . . . but I will say my first time with a female made me realize how much more enjoyable it was to get naked with another woman than it was for me to be naked with a man.
