ANATOMY OF A WOMAN - LOOKING AT THE FEMALE FORM THROUGH THE EYES OF A LESBIAN.

Last month I briefly mentioned that people may think women might do better when it comes to pleasing another woman simply because we have the same anatomy and that should make it easy: we know where to touch, how to touch, and we're touching exactly what we get to play with on our own bodies - so we're basically set up to win, right? Absolutely not, but it is however wishful thinking. We know what feels good to us, and we know that when looking at another female body we have an idea of what we want to do to them to make them feel just as good. But same anatomy doesn't mean same pleasure points, and the way we look at another female body isn't at all how we look at ourselves - which leads us exactly to questioning, how do lesbians look at other females? For starters, we love women just as much a straight men. We lust after them with the same intense craving to have our mouths on their inner thighs that I'm sure most men do. If a woman is attractive to us - you better believe we're looking at her up and down just as much as any other person attracted to them would. We notice a woman's breasts, her ass, the curves of her body. We notice the dimples in her lower back and think to ourselves rather or not she'd be good in bed. Though, I think lesbians are a lot more subtle about their approach in the way they view other women simply because we understand as women what women go through; but it doesn't take away our thoughts from what we want to do to them sexually. Women are beautiful, and sensual creatures - they drive us mad in a way that makes us just want to have our way with them - there is no denying it - and as a lesbian I can say confidently that when I look at the female body, I'm not looking at it in comparison to mine.

When I look at a woman - in a way that I'm trying to sleep with her - I'm usually thinking about bending her over and watching the arch in her back; In all honesty, this isn't a rare thought for lesbians to have. The common question of "are you an ass person or a boobs person?" gets brought up just as often and a constant imagination of dragging my tongue across a woman's waistline - creating goosebumps down her whole body never fails to make me smirk. I often look at other women in a way that more than likely makes me forget I am also a woman. The idea of cupping her breast, holding onto her waist as she sits over me. Women, when looking through the eyes of a lesbian are a completely different sex than we are. When I'm kissing a woman, It never occurs to me that I am "kissing" the same sex, as much as I'm thinking how bad I just want to kiss her. I can't speak on the behalf of all lesbians, but when I'm having sex with my partner my mind is almost always taken over with more of a male energy. More of a dominant nature I guess you could say. There is definitely a different substituted energy when it comes to females looking at females and lesbians looking at other females. I think if lesbians chose to look at other females in a way that we look at ourselves as the average female, we wouldn't be so sexually driven to be with them. We wouldn't crave them in a way that actually drives us mad.
