COMING OUT TO MOM

Think you know all there is to know about girls who like girls? Our in-house columnist S.Tylene gives insight on what ‘coming out to your mom’ is really like.

I’ve been fortunate, unlike many others, to have a mother who accepts and loves me no matter what sexual orientation I identify with. Straight, Gay, Lesbian . . . she could care less as long as I am happy. Coming out has never been the horrific storyline for me as it is for some; I came out, she heard the “ hey mom, I’m a lesbian but I’ve been trying to be straight” speech and from there we just continued to go about our everyday lives. I think admitting to be a lesbian is one thing - vocalizing it to my mom closed a gap for her having to wonder and guess if I’d ever be up for marrying a man; However, I’m not too sure that I can say my mom was fully accepting of me liking woman until she walked in on me and my girlfriend having sex and had to try and erase the image of my face between a girls legs out of her head.

I think about this often, and in my defense it could have been a lot worse; Thankfully for her, all she happened to see were my hands reaching above my head, both placed symmetrically on my girlfriends boobs, and my bare back from hurdling over as my tongue was inched deep inside of her at the time. In most case scenarios I guess this would still be considered pretty bad, but I’m trying to give the scene the benefit of the doubt considering my girlfriend didn’t get to cum the way she deserved to cum and it was her orgasm face that was caught in the act of it all - I personally think she was the only one left with the short end of the stick during it all.

For years after I came out, nothing was ever really said about me being a lesbian. My family didn't ask many questions about the types of women I dated, or if I was even dating at all. Every so often my sister would do the draw back question of "I understand you like woman, but do you think you could ever see yourself marrying a man?" and trust me, I tried . . . but the answer always seemed to remain the same which was of course, no. It isn't that I think men are gross or anything close to that nature, it's that every time I'd try to imagine myself in a sexual position with a man I found myself frustrated with the thought I, myself, couldn't have a girl riding me the way I would like her too. The thoughts always went back to picturing if I had a dick how badly I'd want to be deep inside of her with my arms placed around her thighs, and my hands gripping her ass tightly as her body shifted up and down for the intense pull of me inside of her; Needless to say, I always envied the position of the men I found even slightly attractive, more than I found myself craving or having a desire to be with any of them. I don't think my sister ever felt disappointed by this response as much as she wanted to be sure that I was sure of myself and prepared to endure a different kind of lifestyle.

Oh, my poor mother. I don't think she ever minded me coming out, stating I'm a lesbian, or vocalizing my feelings for woman. I am very grateful for her endless support and love she continued to show. In my defense, she wasn't meant to be home the afternoon she walked in on me and my girlfriend, but I definitely think by walking into the room where I was trying to make a girl cum, she understood exactly what I meant when I came out.
