FAVORITE LESBIAN

VALENTINE'S DAY

RITUAL

S.Tylene provides insight on Valentine's Day for lesbian partners!

"Valentine's Day is just like any other day." I often hear this phrase not just from my friends who are single, but even more so from those who are in relationships. It's not that they actually believe this, it's that their significant other just doesn't care enough to make the day special for them. (Not to be sexist, but it usually comes from my heterosexual friends who love to make excuses for their boyfriends' lack of effort or trying.) For many lesbians, Valentine's Day means getting to be extra cheesy, super emotional, over-the-top in love, and have the most steamy passionate sex we can from all the moments created throughout the day. Lets face it. Valentine's Day sex is quoted to be one of the top sex experiences of the year. (Alongside birthday sex, and whatever make-up sex you manage to have). After all, we associate love and sex together all the time, so Valentine's Day is the day we get to charge that with our best intent of emotional fuel.

You can expect slow mornings with your favorite coffee in bed. Reading pages out of your favorite book while you wait for breakfast to be made. Lesbians are notorious for creating play lists of all the best music in your favorite genre. We'll take you on a nice, long drive, somewhere special where you can listen to countless hours of lyrics that express our true feelings for you. Followed by your favorite activity of some sort, and to wrap it up - A nighttime picnic on the beach with your favorite foods, a bottle of wine, and a jar full of 365 notes telling you about all the little things you do that make us love you.

There's this unspoken ritual that as a lesbian you're almost inclined to make dates more about emotional depth and an overbearing sense of intimacy than you are to wine and dine your date just for the sake of "doing" something on this day. Girls want to be thought about. They want to feel special, and to know they are worth it. Welcome her home to candles, a bath, anything cozy. Make her favorite dessert, put on music, slow dance, and ease into your night.

I don't consider sex on this day to just be about the sex (it never should be just about the sex) but at the end of the day when all is said and done, and emotional intimacy is brought into play, the sex most definitely is about enjoying every inch of each other's bodies. Just like the day, you want to continue to make her feel special. Slow kisses down every inch of her body, starting from her neck, down to her chest. Dragging your tongue across her waistline as you make your way south to the inside of her thighs. Grab her breast as your mouth gets to know her skin. Feel her body ache to have you. Tease her until it's so intense that she can't stop telling you she needs you. Valentine's Day is about love, so . . . make love. Don't just have sex. Bring your body into hers. The one thing about lesbians on Valentine's Day is that it's the one day we have to act on emotions without being called out as dramatically cheesy. It's the one day when the ritual stands active and proves to show emotions bring a lot more heat to the moment.

S.Tylene is a 26 year old, out and proud lesbian who was born and raised in Los Angeles, California.
